Cibo Wine Bar

Coral Gables' newest tavern o' vino

Proving that sprucing up anything is possible, except of course spruce trees, since they're already mad sprucey: Cibo Wine Bar, an Italian-plating vino haven open for dinner on Tuesday, which performed a true miracle by classing up the Mile's former Sports Exchange with Old World-ness in the form of a giant stone oven/pizza bar, and a slew of just-mod-enough butcher block tables lining dimly lit, exposed brick insets adorned with mirrors.

Similarly rustic eats range from antipasto like polenta fries with gorgonzola dip, to spicy wine/garlic/tomato sauce-covered black tiger shrimp, to 15 pies including the Diavola (mozz/roasted red peppers/tomato/spicy Calabrese salami) and one covered in Gorgonzola and pears before being doused in honey, which is delicious despite a frankly underwhelming performance by Lil' Romeo.

They'll regularly rotate upwards of 400 labels of mostly affordable wines (plus bonus-busters like a $500 '93 Ornellaia Antinori, which you should probably get 12 of), which hail from all over Italy, France, and Cali, including by-the-glassers like "Whispering Angel" Rose, or what interviewees call Charlie when he runs out of Ricolos, and is extra-nice.

And in case you're sick of tannin-content debates, Cibo's also working up cocktails like La Fragola Margarita (Toschi Fragoli Liqueur/triple sec/Cazadores Tequila) and a mint/Disaronno/Bacardi Superior/simple syrup-packed Mojito Italiano -- drink enough of them, and it'll be a miracle if you're not ever-green yourself.

They'll also have Lobster Tuesdays (linguine and fresh whole lobster) every week! Until then, get the first look at everything else on the menu, including the full wine, cocktail, and dessert list, right here.
